Barriers to good relations in the Borough are deeply rooted in structural, cultural, and socio-economic challenges. Participants frequently highlighted the physical and symbolic divisions marked by paramilitary flags, graffiti, and symbols. Transport issues and economic disparities further exacerbate isolation, limiting opportunities for engagement and dialogue. Digital isolation, amplified by the spread of misinformation on social media, also hinders the development of trust. Participants raised concerns about entrenched attitudes and gatekeeping within communities, which can restrict participation and stifle new initiatives. Despite these challenges, the focus groups identified pathways to address these barriers, including advancing dialogue, promoting inclusive events, and empowering community leadership. Addressing these barriers requires a collaborative effort to challenge prejudices, improve accessibility to shared spaces, and build trust among diverse groups.
